RIGGS
WASHINGTON D.C

To Our Riggs Friends & Family,

On February 3, we opened our doors to Riggs Washington DC. It was a project that was 2.5 years in the making – one that every single Riggs team member poured their hearts and souls into – and the joy I felt when welcoming you into our storied building to experience the magic was next to nothing.

Six weeks later, the world could not look any more different. At this juncture, it's become our collective responsibility both as businesses and as individuals to do everything we can to help slow the spread of the coronavirus. And the truth of the matter is that temporarily pausing business to facilitate social distancing greatly reduces the spread of the virus that causes COVID-19.

With that knowledge, we've made the difficult but appropriate decision to temporarily dim our lights until it's again safe to bring people together in merriment and cheer – the very reason why I fell in love with hospitality in the first place.

If you had plans to stay with us, we've cancelled your reservation and are reachable at reservations@riggsdc.com to solve any concerns or questions you may have. If you booked a stay through one of our travel partners, please contact them directly to adjust your reservation.

Lastly, it's a complicated situation so it's difficult to say when we'll re-open. For now, we continue to follow the evolving guidance from the CDC, WHO, and national and local government and health agencies, and will keep everyone informed at @riggshotel.

Our hearts are with our D.C. community, our guests, our team members and people around the globe that are impacted by this pandemic.

We can't wait to open our doors to you again. In the meantime – stay safe, stay home, and take care of yourselves.
